- Information filtering through from ex-Polish territories, now USSR, shown that there is no personal freedom for any individual, and especially none for those Poles who remained there. In March 1917 a severe decree stopped all travel between one community and another without a special pennit. The Poles who in spite of everything wish to remain there must accept USSR citizenship. According to information coming from Momosiolki county of Budki, Leow province, the Poles who had become Soviet citizens and had gone to Church where the priest Shruszcz was saying Mass on March it, 1917, were all burned alive in Church. For the moment there are no details as to whether this was done by the Soviet or by Ukrainian bands.
- In ex-Polich southern territories now belonging to the USER Ukrainian partisens are notive against the Soviet authorities. In the night 22-23 Kerch 1947, Ukrainian partisans burned two Red army depots in Grodek Jagiologaki.
